In , Milton Goldsmith turned 79 years old. He appears to have retired by then, although a few of his books were re-released in the s. As seen in my last post, his younger daughter Madeleine had married Charles A. Jacobson, Jr., on September 29, , and his older daughter Rosalind married.

He appears to have retired by then, although a few of his books were re-released in the s. As seen in my last post , his younger daughter Madeleine had married Charles A. I do not know what her husband Michael did for a living. Her husband Charles listed his occupation as a banker on the census. He was 37 when he enlisted in . He was described in the obituary as the author of 24 books and as having been in the advertising business until his retirement 25 years earlier. The only book specifically mentioned in the obituary was Rabbi and Priest and the play that was based upon it, The Little Brother. I was puzzled that FindAGrave had a listing saying that he was buried near Philadelphia after living in New York for over fifty years, and Marla volunteered to go to Roosevelt Memorial Park to find his grave. Sure enough, there was no marker for Milton Goldsmith there, and when I followed up with a call to the cemetery, they had no record of a Milton Goldsmith buried there. Obviously, the FindAGrave memorial I relied on was incorrect, and I have notified the contributor of the memorial. I am hoping the contributor will remove the memorial so others are not confused. Marla also found a death notice for Milton from the Philadelphia Inquirer that stated that he had been cremated. So perhaps he is not buried anywhere. The Philadelphia Jewish Exponent, October 4, , p. For example, from this obituary I learned that Milton could remember when Abraham Lincoln was assassinated although he was not even four years old in April when Lincoln was shot. The obituary also revealed that Milton had entertained the troops during World War I with his skills as an amateur magician. I assume the latter. And not surprisingly, he enjoyed math and word puzzles. Michael Zale died eleven years after his father-in-law in November . It makes me wonder whether a member of the familyâ€”perhaps Michael himselfâ€”was blind. That might explain why I cannot find any records of his military service or his occupation. Michael was 53 when he died. Michael Zale was in fact blind at least as a child. Heather Paxton once again found the answer! She located a news article about a camp for blind children in New Jersey that included this quote: New York Times, November 5, . Rosalind died eleven years after her husband Michael in May . According to her death notice, her family asked that contributions be made to the Vacation Camp and Community Center for the Blind in New York City, another indication that blindness may have afflicted someone in the family. A listing on FindAGrave indicates that Rosalind donated her body to Columbia University for medical research and was later buried in at Green-Wood Cemetery in Brooklyn at a site purchased by Columbia to honor those who had dedicated their bodies to science. I could not find a death notice or obituary for him, only the entry in the Social Security Index. According to that record, his last residence was in Larchmont, New York. He was 78 years old. Like her father, she lived into her nineties, dying on August 21, , in Chevy Chase, Maryland. She was 97 years old. According to her obituary, she had worked as a dietician for many years after college and had been active in many charitable and other organizations while living in Larchmont. Because of my own interest in and love of reading and writing, those family members who contributed to the world through their published works all hold a special place in my heart.
