1: Ravelry: Velo Cycling Sweater pattern by Adrian Bizilia

Vintage pro team wool cycling sweaters. Lifestyle and cycling trainer sweater.

March 20, Knitting Cyclists and Cycling Knitters Last week I finally got back on the roadbike enough to start marking miles on my calendar again. Birds were singing, legs were spinning, flowers were pushing through. Then yesterday, this happened. I am not a committed knitter, but I learned as a child and do it whenever the fancy strikes. The winter of was terrible for cycling, but great for knitting. I made myself an entire new wardrobe, made presents for friends, and did a brisk trade in hats for bicycle components. I must have knitted over 50 hats that winter; it was pretty bad. I did try knitting while cycling on a trainer a couple of times, but the rhythms are too different for it to work well. They seem like such different activities on the surface: Or the element of independence and self-sufficiency that both provide. Apparently Lyli Herse was a prolific knitter. She would knit before bicycle races and brevets, because it kept her from getting nervous at the start. She made matching sweaters for her tandem partners and randonneuring teammates, their patterns distinctly recognisable in the historical photos. Bobbin and Sprocket knits and crochets. And Knitting by Bicycle. Some are predominantly cyclists who are also attracted to knitting. Others are predominantly knitters who also ride bikes. Knit your own wheeling costume or a handlebar flower? Get on a bike. And ride where you like
