Nick Calcagno, former chair of the art department. The mural wall, which is on the Osborn Drug Building downtown, had been damaged by water and is being repaired. The design of the mural is being painted by hand on sign panels in the Fine Arts Building on campus by NEO students, faculty, and members of the community. Upon completion, the mural will be reinstalled at its original site on the exterior wall of Osborn Drugs. Steel nuts and bolts were inserted to straighten the wall up. Jessica Stout, an art instructor at NEO, has worked hand-in-hand with students on this masterpiece and has spent numerous hours on the mural. Estimated time spent on translation: To make the design come out accurately, it had to be transferred from the one inch blocks on the grid precisely onto the eight inch squares drawn on the panel, and Stout said it was too difficult to align the projector with the panel. I did not keep a log of hours spent on the drawing, but there were times I spent all day drawing, which could be up to eight hours. It took about two sessions of working to finish one panel. Below is the process for each panel: Stout began to paint in the fall of She often painted during her morning office hours on Tuesday and Thursday and with students filling in areas of base colors during the end of the studio classes. They were making good progress on the first two panels when they were interrupted by the first NEO play performance and had to move everything off to the side of the stage. After this, they were cleared to move the studio classes into Kah-Ne Hall, and as this was quite an undertaking, they did not go back to painting for the rest of the fall semester. The panels were then moved to the vacated art studio in the Fine Arts Building, and students resumed painting there over Christmas break. When the spring semester started, Stout continued to take only a handful of students to work on the painting during studio class time and painted on weekends when possible. The majority of the work was done in the evenings and on weekends by Stout with the help of some high school students and even her own children who were home during Christmas and Spring Breaks. The Upward Bound students also contributed some time toward the mural. Stout indicated that progress should be good since she has the procedure streamlined and a larger and well-lit area in which to work. Stout will adjust colors as necessary when the panels are in place on the wall of the drugstore.

It was quite an experience. The first interesting thing was the epidural I had! I was numb from the middle of my ribs to my toes. In the middle of the surgery I was having a little bit of trouble breathing because my lungs were a little numb. The body is amazing because as soon as he finished and took out the scope my breathing returned to normal. I think it also helped that I was listening to some very good Christian music. I was actually able to watch the whole surgery minus the cutting and stitching up at the end. The scope had a camera on the end so I watched it all through a TV! I was able to see inside my knee and all the intricate details. God sure did an amazing work when He created us!! I am on my way to a full recovery. I will have to be in the hospital for 5 days total. I know if I were in the US I would be home already but things are very different here. Two of my 17 visitors! Megan and Alissa are some of my crazy co-workers. I am able to have some fun though. Yesterday I had 17 visitors. I think that might be a record somewhere! I have a few pictures of my first set of visitors. Some of my friends who I teach with came to visit. I will update when I get the link. It was so much fun. I had a walker yesterday so they were doing acrobatics with it. Then we had two dance minors so we had some dancing time. My Korean teacher said it was the strangest hospital visit she has ever been on, because we were singing, dancing and taking pictures. Something else very different about Korean hospitals is that if patients are able they can leave the hospital. So I went for a walk today over to 7-Eleven because I really wanted some Coke and chocolate! It was so strange to be outside with my IV and everything, but "when in Korea, do as the Koreans do! I will keep you updated on my recovery!
