Very authentic Italian food, I would highly recommend this restaurant!!!! One of the best fine dining we had in NY. The Lasagna is voted number 1 for me. The reason I said that because I am not a big fan of lasagna but this was the best one! Highly recommended even though it was a bit pricey but all worth the money. At the time what he said seemed not that out of the ordinary but after, it was shocking. This guy, his entire family in tow, said that he had come back for dinner at this Italian restaurant off of Fifth Avenue a second night in a row. I would have figured, after finishing my own dining experience here, that this place survives on Times Square tourists who wander in for a "classic Italian" meal in New York City. From the looks of the place, it would seem that would be what you would get. It really does seem like a place where someone could get a hearty home cooked meal. And the greeting staff is very friendly, humorous, and full of the kind of worldly banter that makes you feel at home. The waitstaff is a little less attentive but still acceptable. But, ugh, the food. But this dish seemed to go out of its way in the other direction and was so bland that I could taste neither potatoes or cream. And I really tried to make my tastebuds work it out because I really wanted to like the place. But in the end, I just felt ripped off. It was on the dime of my company since I was on a business trip though, thankfully. It would definitely be a good place to stop by for a drink for a local but now I know why only other tourists seemed to be there. Not a great Italian restaurant by any stretch of imagination. The pros are as follows: I could go on and on about the negatives about this place. I ordered spaghetti with meatballs because the reviews scared me off of every other thing I was going to order. The meatballs were over cooked and were rubber. My friends were happy with what they ordered but I tasted some of the linguini carbonara and it was pretty bland and tasteless. Olive Garden is a better Italian restaurant than this place. The only reason I can come up with about why this place is still in business is because they can scam tourists who are only here because of the proximity to Times Square. The food is ok, but not worth the price. The bread was at least a day old, the pasta frescoes and the fettuccini carbonara were over cooked. Fantastic place on the block. I have there many times and always found Via Italia to be the best! Mario the owner is fantastic, and the entire wait staff is terrific. Plus, I am consistently amazed by the pours of both wine and spirits. This place is a secret gem. Went here on a lark. The place I wanted to go to, was a couple of doors over. Saw Via Italia and decided to go there. The place was nearly empty, which I should have taken as a warning. First off, the waiter forgot our menus. From there On, it was all downhill. Ordered Chardonnay and was given Riesling. Told the waiter and asked for a beer instead. Ordered a Pierino but got a Heineken. Let that one slide. My girlfriend and I both ordered a bowl of Pasta Fagipoli. When we got our soups, they both looked like bowls of dirty sink water with beans and noodles thrown in. I could tell by looking at them, they were going to be horrible. Worst we ever tasted. Our entrees were very average. Little to no flavor. Dish was screaming for flavor. All we could do was add salt. The ambiance in this place is decent. They really need to focus on improving their food quality. Wish I could give this place a better rating. But the service was error prone and food was terrible. Zero music or ambiance. Cold bread and cold butter. The crostini came as soggy bread doused in tomato sauce and topped with melted cheese. Servers were more concerned with where the silverware and plates were than the food or service. Server nearly dumped one plate while refusing to let us touch another plate as he struggled to put down on the table. Ravioli was fine, but nothing special. The lasagna came loaded with meat and apparently the same sheet of mozzarella melted on top. Scallops were cooked well, but the shrimp were very overdone. There was no seasoning on any dish. No spice or herb outside of parsley for show. We asked for the check and waited another 15 min to get it. Server only asked us about the food when we were leaving. The chicken Francese served at Via Italia is the very best I have ever eaten. Classic white table cloth Italian restaurant, good service, lots of charm. I went here for lunch. I had the pre-fix lunch. I had the clam soup, chicken parmigiana, and tiramisu dessert. It also brings a glass of wine and coffee. I loved the food, specially the fresh mozzarella cheese the chicken parm brought. I also noticed that the Staff was very friendly. They go above and beyond to make you feel welcome and comfortable. I would definitely visit again. What can I say, this restaurant is magnificent. My favorite meal is the penne arrabiata. Great food great service and a great owner. Come by and try some amazing Italian food at affordable prices. Charming Italian ristorante offering great Italian food, good music and good service and friendly staff, The best Italian rest. Food was good but service was hit and miss. Food was authentic but again service was a very slow. We were starving and wanted Italian and this was the closest place. I went a few weeks ago with friends for dinner, and it was great. The food was amazing, good sized portions. The wait staff was attentive without being overbearing. By the time we left it was like we were old friends with the owner and the waiters who offered us complimentary after dinner drinks. I would absolutely recommend Via Italia and I will be returning. Highly inflated tourist trap prices, mediocre food at best, and a rude, surly staff. Save yourself a lousy experience and skip this dump. Stay away from here. Really good, right across from the Cambria. I have eaten Italian in NYC many many times and the simplicity of gnocchi bolognese was outstanding paired with crusty warm Italian bread and a couple of Stella Artois made for an awesome homemade experience. I had spaghetti and meatballs. Via Italia Restaurant This business has been claimed by the owner or a representative. Learn more reviews.
