V.R. proclamation [microform]: Canada, electoral division of Burlington, comprehending the north and south ridings of the county of Wentworth, and the city of Hamilton, to wit: public notice is hereby given to the electors of the said electoral division of Burlington for the purpose of electing a person to represent them in the Legislative Assembly.

Under this treaty, France ceded ownership of all of continental North America east of the Mississippi River, including Quebec, and the rest of Canada to Britain. Spain received all French territory west of the Mississippi. Both Spain and Britain received some French islands in the Caribbean. France kept a few small islands used by fishermen, [1] modern-day Haiti and the rich sugar island of Guadeloupe. New colonies[edit] The Eastern orange line in the southern areas, and St. They missed the amicable relationship with the French, along with the gifts they bestowed upon them, neither of which they had with the British. However tribes were able to take over a large number of the forts which commanded the waterways involved in trade within the region and export to Great Britain. Proclamation line[edit] New borders drawn by the Royal Proclamation of At the outset, the Royal Proclamation of defined the jurisdictional limits of the occupied territories of North America. Explaining parts of the Frontier expansion in North America, in Colonial America and especially Canada colony of New France, a diminutive new colony, the Province of Quebec was carved. The territory northeast of the St. John River on the Labrador coast was placed under the Newfoundland Colony. The proclamation line was not intended to be a permanent boundary between the colonists and Aboriginal lands, but rather a temporary boundary which could be extended further west in an orderly, lawful manner. Its contour was defined by the headwaters that formed the watershed along the Appalachians. All land with rivers that flowed into the Atlantic was designated for the colonial entities, while all the land with rivers that flowed into the Mississippi was reserved for the native Indian population. The proclamation outlawed the private purchase of Native American land, which had often created problems in the past. Instead, all future land purchases were to be made by Crown officials "at some public Meeting or Assembly of the said Indians". Furthermore, British colonials were forbidden to settle on native lands, and colonial officials were forbidden to grant ground or lands without royal approval. The proclamation gave the Crown a monopoly on all future land purchases from American Indians. British colonists and land speculators objected to the proclamation boundary since the British government had already assigned land grants to them. For example, George Washington and his Virginia soldiers had been granted lands past the boundary. Prominent American colonials joined with the land speculators in Britain to lobby the government to move the line further west. Their demands were met, and the boundary line was adjusted in a series of treaties with the Native Americans. A new map was drawn up at the Treaty of Fort Stanwix in , that moved the line from the green line to the red line on the map much further to the west, and gave the lands claimed by the colonists to the British side.
