There are no two collections of baseball sports cards that are exactly the same, At least that we have seen. There is no right or wrong way to collect sportscards all collectors have their own way of collecting. Since sports card collecting is a hobby, what you collect, how much you collect, and how much time and money you spend collecting are entirely up to you. The funds you have available for collecting and your own personal taste should determine how you collect. Information and ideas presented here are intended to help you get the most enjoyment from this hobby and have fun collecting for years to come. It is impossible to collect every card ever produced. Therefore, beginners as well as intermediate and advanced collectors usually specialize in some way shape or form like by collecting only old baseball cards or only new baseball cards or only one sport such as collecting football cards. One of the reasons this hobby is popular is that individual collectors can define and tailor their collecting methods to match their own tastes. To give you some ideas of the various approaches to collecting baseball cards and other sports cards, we will list some of the more popular areas of specialization. Many collectors select complete sets from particular years. For example, they may concentrate on assembling complete baseball card sets from all the years since their birth or since they became avid sports fans. They may try to collect a card for every baseball player during a specified period of time. Many others wish to acquire only certain players. Usually such players are the superstars of the sport or players that they know or have seen in person, but occasionally collectors will specialize in all the cards of players who attended a particular college or came from a certain town. Some collectors are only interested in the first cards or rookie cards of certain players. Another fun way to collect baseball cards is by team. Most fans have a favorite team, and it is natural for that loyalty to be translated into a desire for cards of the players on that favorite team. Collecting baseball cards and other sportscards like football cards, basketball cards, and hockey cards is a great getaway from everyday life and is a fun pastime for the whole family. Trading cards with family members makes for a fun family time together. You can buy cards in person at sports card shops, at online stores, at auction sites like Ebay, and to a more limited degree at retail stores retail stores often only sell packs and sometimes baseball card boxes of the most current cards. Where you buy will often depend on the service you receive and where you feel you can trust the place selling baseball cards. Most times you will get the most for you sports cards when you can sell them directly to another collector. Selling to baseball card dealers will bring less most of the time because they need to resell them for a profit and have they have the various costs to run their business that also have to be covered. Selling baseball cards on Ebay is often the easiest way for many, however many collectors enjoy setting up at shows and flea markets to sell their extras. Others build web sites with their baseball cards for sale. How you choose will depend how much time you want to spend on baseball card collecting, sports card collecting and or if you are continuing to collect or just selling your cards. What ever way you pick it is recommend that you know the value and prices of your baseball cards, sports cards, and other collector cards no matter if they are old baseball cards or new baseball cards. The best way is with a good price guide like Beckett price guides for the current values of cards. The Old Judge picture cards were issued from to and more than different baseball cards from that set have been cataloged, not to mention the many cards made for other sports and non sports. In turn companies in other industries including candy, caramel, and gum makers used baseball cards as premiums to sell their products. New companies like Score, Upper Deck, Pacific, and others started making cards and the competition led to the high-tech sports cards we have today with the many different brands being made. With so many brands being made came great compition and many of the cards compinies have now
