I miss your Dad like crazy and my phone is dead. Biggest life lesson is to always carry a phone charger with you. To give you context on where I am in my life. Your mom had a couple of crazy nights that led her to take a full leap of faith and just do it. If you open your heart to God and listen, His power is incredible. Your dad slept through this all and was almost woken up by Kyle jumping in our bed. That night was important for me because Dan found out I was leaving the company as I tried to tell all my artists I worked on that I would no longer be with them. My artists at that time included: I told him I would always be there for Bastille, whatever they needed. We discussed how I could further help them. Gotta brag, I had the hook up for Capitol and got us the best table in the house along with a karaoke room for several hours couple thousand dollar value. I lost my voice after screaming at the top of my lungs. Kozak and I continued our adventure to strip clubs till 4 in the morning. We grabbed Toi Thai food before I came home and literally collapsed cuddling it. I was already going to reconnect with Justin Little that day. Key lesson here, be nice to everyone. You never know who they are or what they will become. I remembered that to this day. Uncle Finnoh was there that night when my car ran out of gas and told me to just chill. About to head out to Popaganda to see Seinabo headline the festival. I cannot express to you the excitement and hope I hold.
