Neil Bason When I started playing tabletop games I knew there would be many adventures ahead. Yet there I was, planning and plotting every room in my three storey property like the very existence of civilisation depended upon it. Dream Home, the competitive house building game designed by Klemens Kalicki and published by Asmodee, is a game that proved far more engaging than I ever could have envisioned. What I was hit with almost immediately was that to come out on top in Dream Home requires some genuine strategical thinking, and not just making the house look as pretty, or for myself and my OCD, as organised as possible. The basic idea is that two to four players are in competition with each other to put together each room in their dream home in such a way that maximises the point scoring. Each player has a board depicting the shell of their house. In the centre of the table sits the game board. This game board contains two rows of cards, one above the other. The bottom row consists of room cards that can be picked and played within the shell of the house. The top row contains resource cards, these range from roof tiles to tree houses to a handyman, and offer various bonuses during and at the end of the game. The basic idea is that in turn each player chooses to draft two cards into their hand, one from the room row and one from the resource row. The trick is, that each card has to be in the same column, so for example if the room card was taken from column three, the player also takes the resource from column three. What this produces is some real tactical decision making about how best to proceed. The rooms are worth points when played, but they get more points when combined with other rooms. So for example, a single card living room is worth one point, but, a double card living room jumps to four points, and should you embrace full Kardashian and go for a triple sized living room, this is then worth a whopping nine points! The scoring system reminded me very much of Sushi Go, where cards become more valuable when combined with others. There are loads of little details and clever little gameplay elements within Dream Home, but I hate reading an overblown description of the rules of play in any review, so instead I want to talk about the actual experience of playing. What takes place in my experience at the table with Dream Home is everyone starts life pretty jovial, upbeat and friendly: What am I going to do now? My children play the games, no swearing allowed. But Dream Home does a wonderful job of delivering a game that holds some very nice opportunity for tactical play, and also for seeing said tactics come crumbling down around your ears. We played four times one after the other on day one of the game hitting the table, and that is something that very rarely happens. In terms of the looks, Dream Home, is a real beauty. The game has a real vibrancy to it and is superbly striking on the eye. Everything in the box is very well made. The cardboard pieces feel solid and ready for plenty of play, there are enough scorecards to keep track of a huge number of play-throughs, and the cards are small but look great with the detailed artwork and glorious colours. One for the Kids I can say without any doubts this is one that can be enjoyed by the entire family. As previously my youngest two, Harrison, 6, and Holly, 11, played, and this time we mixed and matched because everyone wanted to try this one. The game is a true family pleaser. It offers light hearted competition, and holds rules that even the younger members of the family will soon be at ease with. Play is fast and interesting, so the chances of young minds wandering is limited. Dream Home has proved a big hit in our household, and if you were looking for an alternative family game for Christmas then this one could prove a real winner. Easy to understand and a lot of fun, it was also cool that Harrison could play and understand it quickly. And believe me, Dream Home, fits that bill like my second kitchen fitted nicely alongside the bathroom yeah, I was beaten to a card or two. It is a great looking, easy playing, family friendly, gaming treat and perfect as a gateway game to bring others in from the cold. Find it at your local store here A big thank you to Esdevium Games for providing our copy for review.

Testimonials Hello, I purchased 3 of your babies on Saturday, and I just wanted to say thank you. They are eating like champs, and very friendly. I have actually had one jump on my hand when I was feeding them! They are so cute. I know you were apprehensive to letting me into your lizard room and I wanted to thank you for doing so. I was pleasantly surprised at how good their conditions were. It was also nice because you answered a few of my questions as we are planning to breed in the future, and I was unsure of a few things. You should put a comment area on your web page. I would definilty leave a comment on your lizards, and their conditions. And I am sure we will be calling on you when we are in the market to add to our stock in the future. He arrived in perfect condition and is doing amazing. We appreciate the fact that we received the exact dragon that was pictured and that he was in NO way misrepresented. He is nothing short of perfection and surpassed our expectations. He is a great addition to our bloodlines. Thanks again and we look forward to doing business with you in the future as well. She looks great and will be a great asset to my project. Thanks again for going above and beyond to get her here safely to us, we will likely be return customers and will gladly pass your website along to others. Photos and updates soon! Bailey got sneaky and found the little girl we had been hiding her in our bedroom last night! Another update and some photos soon.
