Welcome to Pyongyang. Peter Walker talks to North Korea expert Nick Bonner and photographer Charlie Crane, who have produced a book of photographs from the country's capital, Pyongyang.

If you have been here before, you have already been through the process of marvelling at its architectural beauty, the cleanliness of its streets and the vibrancy of its people. Pyongyang is a new old city. Having been nearly completely decimated in the war its breathtaking layout was designed to rebuild their country more beautiful than it ever was – and this is apparent everywhere you look. One of the first landmarks that will greet you upon your entry into Pyongyang city limits is the Arch of Triumph. This monument commemorates the two decades of Korean resistance to Japanese occupation between 1945 and 1948, and is the second largest triumphant arch in existence anywhere in the world and taller than that of Paris. It stands on the eastern bank of the Taedong River. As the second tallest monumental column in the world, the view of the city from the top of the tower is a sight not to be missed. The Pyongyang Metro will have you in awe of the passionate labor that went into creating what is more than a means of transportation, but a true work of art. Completed in 1971, the Metro is used by at least 1.5 million people a day. Take a ride on one of the refurbished Berlin underground trains for an unforgettable experience. Not to be outdone is the beauty of Kim Il-Sung Square. The square may be known in the west for being the scene of military parades, but stop by on any day and there may be a chance that a mass dance or other cultural event is happening here. With its riverside setting, one can get an excellent view of the Juche Tower in all its glory from across the Taedong. Built in 1982, the library has over 10 million rooms and can hold up to 30 million books. The Victorious Fatherland Liberation War Museum was originally constructed at the conclusion of the war and opened to the public in August of 1991. The museum was rebuilt and reopened in 2007 at its current location. Over 1.5 million people visited that particular year alone. As you step foot inside the Yanggakdo International Hotel, you enter into what appears to be a world of its own. With a bowling alley, bar, bookstore, swimming pool and a world renowned revolving restaurant on the 47th floor that overlooks the city, the hotel has far more than anyone could ask for or desire. Pyongyang will undoubtedly leave you lost for words. It is a city impossible to not fall in love with, from its hospitable people to gorgeous scenery. Whether you spend your evenings and late nights drinking Korean beer or challenging yourself to the most intense rides at the fun fair, Pyongyang will earn its spot in your heart for the rest of your life. If you are a human and are seeing this field, please leave it blank.

Photographer Charlie Crane and real-life tour-guide Nicholas Bonner were granted official government approval to produce a "tourist's guide" to Pyongyang, the capital city of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea "but they had to play by the rules.

It will also be the 30th running of the race, and we gladly invite you all to join us for this special occasion. You can view the range of tours available above. With a time of 2: Founded in , the organisation now has more than member races in over 90 countries. You can view the official AIMS listing here on their website. The crowd support is incredible, and crossing the finishing line is an extraordinary experience thanks to the 50, Koreans cheering you on as you make your way around Kim Il Sung stadium. However, if you are to get the most out of this event, we recommend you expand the following sections to read further about the event. Koryo Tours is the official travel partner of the Pyongyang Marathon. Booking directly with Koryo automatically guarantees you race entry. When selecting which race distance to enter, please take time to properly consider the preparation you have done, and what you are physically and mentally capable of. We advise against attempting one of the longer race distances in Pyongyang if you have not done them before. Race Day Expect the morning to be cool, with a peak temperature of around degrees Celsius in the middle of the day. Please ensure you are wearing appropriate clothing, to suit your comfort in such conditions, and remember to protect yourself from the sun, including applying sunscreen. An official race shirt will be provided for you to wear, or you can wear your own. Please note that shirts featuring flags, political slogans, prominent logos or obscene words are prohibited. Refreshment stations are placed every 5km along the route, but will only provide water. There are no limits on how much food and drink you can bring in to the country. Avoid getting in the way of faster runners, especially the professional field, and try not to make sudden stops or wild changes of direction. If you need to stop or change direction then communicate this in advance to those around you via hand or voice signals. If you injure yourself, or start to feel unwell, then stop your race immediately and move to the side of the road. Ambulances will be driving the course at all times, and will come to collect you once you have stopped. Finishing The stadium doors will close after 4 hours so that the awards ceremony can begin. The time limit for the Full Marathon race has, for , been set at 4 hours. Any amateurs running the Full Marathon who cannot make the 4 hour cut-off time and are still on the course will be asked to stop, and their time will be recorded as a DNF. The certificate and medal will be given to you before your departure from Pyongyang. The Pyongyang Marathon is now open for applications! Get in early to secure your place as spots are limited!

Charlie Crane's large-format photographs of Pyongyang, the capital city of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, were taken on three visits between and His landscapes and portraits are presented here in the manner of a guidebook, with an introduction by Crane's collaborator and.

From Welcome to Pyongyang: We have made three documentaries and several radio programmes, but producing a photographic record that respected the unique conditions of the country was a particular challenge. Photography in the DPRK is a strange beast. Koreans are anxious to show off the best of themselves and their country at all times. This can lead to farce as people overcome their nerves and compete to have their picture taken, or refuse permission based on seemingly innocuous details such as having a missing button. Pyongyang citizens use cameras as a way of recording themselves at particular points in time and often at a place of significance -- for example, a wedding group at the Workers Party Monument where Government photographers will take the picture for a small fee. For photographs taken at locations such as the zoo or even on Kim Il Sung Square, they use kitsch props such as stuffed horses, flower arches and teddy bears. If a family is fortunate enough to have a camera it will be used for formal portraits. Frames are not wasted on informal snaps. There is no camera culture and film development costs are expensive, although the number of digital cameras in circulation is growing and may lead to a more informal approach. Family albums record major events such as birthday celebrations, university graduations and grandparents in front of tables laden with gifts on their wedding anniversary. Photography for public exhibition is used to pay respects to the Leaders and to demonstrate the allegiance and support of the public and army in the various construction projects around the country. There are no photography exhibitions at the National Art Gallery for aesthetic purposes only. Photography is not regarded as an art form in its own right. Tourists often find that the restrictions on photography are not as intense as they initially thought. Memorably, in one of our tourists came across a platoon of soldiers marching down a broad avenue. From a safe distance he braved a little wave, and without breaking step the entire platoon waved back for a picture. Nevertheless, it is almost impossible to get beyond the vision of the place that has been so meticulously crafted. What we present in this book is Pyongyang on its own terms. Charlie Crane and I have accepted, even embraced, the limitations placed upon photography. We hope the result is as interesting and revealing as any undercover photo-essay. I make no apologies for presenting it this way. Visiting Pyongyang is a unique and rewarding experience, and I urge anyone who has the opportunity to see it for themselves.
