At the Dawn of the 20th Century, Roosevelt Pays Tribute to West Point on Its Centennial Quote from a Speech Given at the Commencement for the th Anniversary. On March 16, , President Thomas Jefferson signed legislation establishing the United States Military Academy.

The letter arrived in my court as a result of Mr. However, I did not know of Laurence Halstead. I happened to be between homes at the time without personal papers. But Hansen persisted and made me do my homework. Without the details, suffice it to say that a relationship was established. The point here is that these committee members do a brilliant job of genealogical sleuthing. This celebration will mark the centennial of the graduation of the Class of All descendants and other relatives of the cadets have been invited to attend. The program will consist of a reception Thursday evening. He got it together, it was a great success, and now it is a tradition aborning. I will relish the Special Collections Section. One of my classmates told me that had I paid as much attention to the Library as a Cadet I would have been an Engineer. If you are not a member, I believe you should be. I lived at West Point for seven years and my family is interred there. I am always thrilled to return to the citadel of my heart. He made a valiant effort to contact as many descendants as he could find, arranged with USMA authorities to hold the reunion, and brought the whole thing off--I believe it was in Volunteers now research court records, archives listings, etc, throughout the country to try to reach as many descendants as possible. In the 4 years of my involvement with the project , the centennial classes generally had fewer than 40 graduates. The committee would usually locate a descendant for every alumnus who had any, and normally about descendants would attend A moving part of the reunion was the Last Roll Call at Trophy Point when the names of each graduate were read as Taps was played and descendants who were present would stand to honor their ancestor. Most of the descendants are grandchildren, great-grandchildren, or great-great-grandchildren the originator of the tradition, as a class son, was unique in my experience. Generally, the people who attend have never been to West Point before--many had no idea they had an ancestor who was an alumnus before being contacted by the committee, but some had warm memories of the grandfather who had told them stories of his service when they were young children. At the formal banquet on the last night of the reunion, each family designates a representative to tell briefly about their ancestor. To say that the experience is nostalgic and moving would be an understatement! I have tried to get the Alumni and Development folks here at Auburn University interested in a similar effort. Not sure it could be the same at any other place, though, since the graduating classes at most institutions would not present the same kind of history lesson one gets from a trip through the USMA archives.

Colonel Sylvanus Thayer served as Superintendent from 1817-1 He upgraded academic standards, instilled military discipline and made civil engineering the foundation of the curriculum. They gained experience and national recognition during the Mexican and Indian wars and dominated the highest ranks on both sides during the Civil War. Academy graduates included Ulysses S. Sherman and Stonewall Jackson. After his election as President, William McKinley appointed Theodore Roosevelt assistant secretary of the navy in Roosevelt resigned his post in May to take command of the First U. Volunteer Cavalry, also known as the Rough Riders. At the conclusion of the war, mainly because of his war record and flair, Roosevelt was almost immediately elected governor of New York. Later chosen by McKinley to run for Vice President, he took that office in A military man, nationalist, and outdoorsman, Roosevelt established the power of the American presidency as no other president had, taking American initiatives onto an international scale. Though not a West Pointer himself, he served with many in Cuba, and no one knew better than he the contributions its graduates had made to the nation. President Roosevelt was invited to sound the keynote of the event, and on June 11 delivered the centennial speech at the Commencement for the class of that year. For hours the crowds had been gathering on the parade ground and along the walks leading down the steep hill to the railroad station. When the train came in sight, the path leading up to the academy grounds became so crowded that a detachment of soldiers, assisted by the sentinels at intervals along the way had to resort to strenuous measures to force the crowd back. Behind the president were grouped nearly a hundred military men, distinguished civilians, foreigners, and national and metropolitan detectives. It was printed and re-printed, and so defined the role of West Point that it can still be found on the military academy website. It is the only signed speech segment of his as president that we can recall seeing.
