Why Am I Here? Where did I come from? What am I worth? Do I have any intrinsic value? Do I serve a purpose? These are all fundamental questions. Because you are a part of the world, how you see the world also determines how you see and treat yourself. Where do we begin in our search for the truth? We begin at the beginning. Perhaps the most fundamental question is: For example— Why Am I Here? Life is one big accident. Our worth is ultimately subjective. John Dewey, the famous 20th century atheist explained, "There is no God and there is no soul. Hence, there are no needs for the props of traditional religion. With dogma and creed excluded, then immutable truth is also dead and buried. There is no room for fixed, natural law or moral absolutes. In the absence of absolute morality, power reigns supreme; the strong survive and the weak get exploited. Well, if God does exist, that means He is ultimate reality. What He says is right is absolutely right and what He says is wrong is absolutely wrong. God makes the rules. Will God ever hold us accountable for our moral decisions? The prevailing instinct among the majority seems to be that, yes, God will hold us accountable. So begin at the beginning.

Affiliate Map I stare at the drops of sweat that pool on the black mat. Tonight, we are doing squat cleans and bar-over burpees. I wonder how many drops I have contributed so far. I cough lightly and laugh at myself. I hear coach Molly proclaim there are five minutes left in this workout. What am I doing here? I glance at the person next to me. This workout is killing me. I am the everyday athlete struggling to get fit. I try my hardest and need to scale many workouts. I work out with everyone from the firebreather to the rookie and the vast majority of us that lie somewhere in between. I find inspiration in everyone. I had no idea what to expect going into it. I pushed myself hard mentally and physically; I think that was what I was supposed to do. I still finished next to last. I was scared of knowing. Knowing how much the Open is going to hurt. Knowing exactly how far down the leaderboard I stand. Instead, I measure myself against someone in the gym. Or I measure myself against what I think I should be doing in the gym. I get caught up in my own performance. And then in the Open, I compare myself to the world. I compared very poorly last year, but I guess someone had to anchor the bottom of the Leaderboard. If I only compete against myself, I sometimes feel like I never win. This mindset holds me back. I know that nothing but hard work and practice will get me the skills and strength I want. I believe that I have improved over the year, but my doubts still whisper to me. The workout continues as I keep grinding out reps and raining sweat. A year-old firebreather named Derek finished the workout minutes ago, and is now telling me: I pick myself up off the mat. Coach Molly announces there are 45 seconds left. Sweat drips into my eyes as I hop over the bar and start another burpee. Derek demands that I get back up and do another. I hang my head and catch my breath. I used to laugh and imagine that people cheered for me to hurry up and finish so they could put away their bumper plates and go home. But now I know different. We cheer for each other because we care. We care about the success of everyone here. The coaches at CrossFit Industrious have designed my success into their programming, and the other athletes have coaxed it out of me by being a number on the leaderboard that I can chase, or another moving, sweating body silently encouraging me to go on, to keep up, to fight this one through. And on nights like tonight, my success is coaxed out of me by a loud, fit kid cheering me on even when I want to have reached the time cap already. I will put those fears and doubts aside, and trust in the people who encourage and believe in me. It will not be about the place I take this year.
