Well, I did miss one yearâ€” But otherwise, every year. A journal kept so far for forty years. New entries, new ideas, new events, every year. The correct answer is ten. Where do you go from here with your life? The answer to that has always boiled down to answering just three questions, and they have remained the same these forty years: WHAT are your favorite transferable skills? WHERE would you most like to be able to use those skills? And HOW do you find the name or names of that job, and the places that have such jobs, and the people with the power to hire you? But around that core have spun dozens of new developments, year after year, like planets in orbit around the sun. How much is too little? I think there is too much information floating around out thereâ€”particularly on the Internetâ€”and if you try to include it all, the book turns into hundreds of pages. So my responsibility is to sift it down, and talk only about the most essential truths. So, throughout the year, I cast my net. I accumulate vast files on all the stuff that has an effect on our jobs and our ability to feed ourselves and our families: Plus, four times a year I do nothing but interact with job-hunters and career-changers, gathered in my home, for five days at a time. By such personal interaction, I stay very up-to-date on the current problems men and women are running into, out there in the World of Unemployment. But then, having cast the widest net possible all year long, when it comes time to write my annual update of this book, I haul in my nets, sort out the fishes, and try to pick only the best. Now my job is not to know, or write about, too much. Now it is my job to write simply, and distill the mountains of information down to the basics. My job is to find the ideas that give the reader hope. For this is, in the end, a Book of Hope, masquerading as a job-finding manual. I do not stay here, alone. I am not inspired, alone. I am not able to write, alone. So, I am filled with gratitude. First of all, I am enchanted by every moment of my life with such a wondrous woman as my wife, Marci. I am so grateful for her. It is a rare woman who will let twenty-one strangers come be guests in her home for five days at a time, cooking breakfast and lunch for them all, while radiating grace and individual concern for each, throughout. For details, write to fivedayworkshop@aol.com. She was a dear. I shall miss her voice, and her wisdom. Stephen, Mark, Gary, and Sharon, plus their most-loving mother, my former wife, Jan, who shares in all our family gatherings; and my former stepdaughter, Dr. Serena Brewer, whom I helped raise for twenty years, who now shares her natural-born compassion with the people of Butte, Montana. I love them all dearly, dearly, dearly. He was a dear man, and I owe him more than I can say for helping Parachute find its audience, and for letting me have great control over the annual editions. Parachute would never have sold ten million copies, were it not for him. My especial thanks to my readersâ€”all ten million of youâ€”for buying my books, trusting my counsel, and following your dream. I have never met so many wonderful souls. I am so thankful for you all. In closing, I cannot fail to mention my profound thanks to our Great Creator, Who all my life I have known through my Lord Jesus Christ, as real to me as breathing, and the Rock of my life through every trial and tragedy, most especially the assassination of my only brother, Don Bolles, with a car bomb, in downtown Phoenix, Arizona, back in â€”now memorialized in one of the rooms at the Newseum, in Washington, D. But it is the source of whatever grace, wisdom, or compassion I have ever found, or shared with others. I am grateful beyond measure for such a life, and such a mission as Our Creator has given me:
