Carolyn and Jane-Marie are best friends. That means they share everything: gymnastics and snacks after school, jokes, and secrets. But then Jane-Marie tells Carolyn's secret, and nothing is the same anymore.

We were waiting for our boyfriends to come to the parking lot and meet us where we would then drive to a nice Italian restaurant for dinner. I think about this moment in time regularly. If the boys had come down just minutes earlier maybe I could have missed her secret altogether. We all would have been better off I think. Instead, I was alone with her. The moment was very real and scary. Once she was done with her confession, which she seemed oddly quite proud of, she looked at me with such intensity that the rest of the world was blocked out for a moment. She told me to take her secret to the grave and never tell anyone. This is an enormous amount of pressure and responsibility to put on a person. In all reality, this happens every day in high school. We develop friendships and friends share secrets. Longer term, in life we are regularly tested with secrets and decisions that not only affect us, but those around us. This particular secret haunted me for months. I would see my other girlfriend come to school singing how much she loved and trusted her boyfriend, and only I knew he had cheated on her. I felt a part of the lie. Check in with yourself and decide how you feel about the circumstance. Who will it hurt if you tell? I made the conscious choice to tell my friend her boyfriend had cheated. Now, in this particular scenario, my decision had set off a massive wave of negative reactions that truthfully led to my rock bottom moment in life. Stemming from this, I have a few insights for you: It is a reflection of who you are and your friends will influence you in all sorts of ways. Take decisions such as these extremely seriously. I remember feeling the rush and thrill of secrets and danger and pushing boundaries when I was a teen. If I had it to do over, I still would have told my friend, but I would have gone to a teacher or mentor first and asked advice on how to handle the delivery of the truth to my friend. Maybe I could have explained things differently or better. This does NOT make you a bad friend. If anything, it makes you a better friend because you want to be loyal to that person and you want to support them. At the end of the day you have to do what feels right for you and sometimes that means going against the crowd. Nothing can beat Truth. There is no need to rush when you are faced with an important decision. Take the time you need to reflect, question and decide what to do. Hopefully these insights based on my experience will help offer some guidance in the decision you are questioning. If you thought this article was helpful, then chances are it will help others too. WHEN JANE-MARIE TOLD MY SECRET pdf

2: WHEN JANE-MARIE TOLD MY SECRET by Gina Willner-Pardo , Nancy Poydar | Kirkus Reviews

Carolyn shares school lunches, special jokes, and private nicknames with her best friend, Jane-Marie, and they have a lot of fun together at school and at home; but when Jane-Marie gives away a secret, Carolyn can't forgive the betrayal.

So this is actually another work I did. Lena noticed every bit. And while that bothered the CEO, she busied herself with research and development and tracking down her evil mother. So right now at this moment was the first time Kara and Lena had had a real date. She is just so damn adorable. Kara fixed her glasses as her cheeks blushed bright red. And she loved that about her. Kara then moved closer to Lena on the couch, Lena reacted all too well, leaning back on the couch allowing Kara to lay herself on top. Lena loved when Kara took control, she rarely did. Kara was usually quite shy about making out. Even more so about sex, something that the couple had yet to enjoy. They had been dating for three months and Lena felt like it was time. Lena groaned in frustration. Kara had never done that before. After a few more seconds of silence, Kara screamed. Lena grunted as Kara was squeezing her too tight. The explosion and fire hurled over her office, burning up the furniture inside, but Lena felt nothing. Lena immediately assessed her condition but Lena was shocked. Lena longed to see those piercing blue puppy dog eyes that were impossible to resist. Suddenly Kara came to, screaming as she jerked awake. Kara gave Lena a sullen look of sorry. Lena returned with a half-smile. Lena gently wiped them away. Lena nodded in agreement. Lena was so thankful that she was the only one besides Kara present in the building, it was Saturday night after all and Lena was happy she forced her ever so loyal assistant to go home for the weekend and not come in at all. Lena quickly called her security team and let them know what happened while Kara called her sister to inform the DEO of the incident. Kara then led Lena through the carnage that was her office, leading her to the balcony. It took a few seconds for Lena to answer. She just found out her girlfriend, this incredible woman she was dating, the woman she loved, was not just an amazing reporter but also the hero of National City. There were so many questions to be asked, so many things that needed to be said, but one thing Lena knew without a doubt, she loved Kara, Supergirl or not, she loved Kara Danvers, and yes, Lena trusts her, Lena trusts Kara with her life. Kara slowly takes to the night sky, leaving the burning office behind. Lena was shaking wildly, still somewhat scared from the flight. Kara gently laid Lena on her couch. Kara knelt beside Lena, grabbing her hands and intertwining it with her own. After a few seconds they broke apart and Lena smiled and stared at her superhero. She had begun to cry in her hands. Kara had taken notice. Kara began to cry as well. Kara now was in as many tears as Lena. But I was afraid of what would happen to you. I was afraid that your mother would somehow find out and hurt you. Or if somehow if you were kidnapped someone would torture you to reveal my identity. It was clear to the couple that they both had many fears for the other. After several minutes of silence, Lena let out a small chuckle. Kara sat up with curious eyes. I was all over the place. She blushed a light shade of red when she realized how ridiculous her cover was. Lena smiled, remembering when she felt the same way. Practically the first day she met the blonde reporter. When Lena had told her that, it basically set Kara on the path that brought her to Lena. Her job as a reporter allowed Kara to be close to Lena, allowed Kara to visit Lena basically whenever she wanted. Lena also felt Kara tense up on her lap. I have no doubt in my mind. But I wanted you to know that it was me, or the Kara me, that was the one who saved you, not the Supergirl me. And that night when we confessed our feelings to each other and we finally started dating, but when you told me that I was your hero, I knew I loved you. It was the first time Kara had said I love you. It caught Lena off guard. But Lena knew that she loved Kara too. Kara had never heard her name said like that before and she loved the way Lena said it. Lena felt goosebumps riddle her body as Kara wriggled her blouse off her body.
