1: Where to Stash Your Cash Legally (January edition) | Open Library

This book is all about legal ways to save on taxes, protect your wealth, invest and grow your money and find financial peace of mind. The book tells the who, what, why, when, and wherefore of the offshore world - based on Robert E. Bauman's own experience, and that of the many experts he works with across the globe, the professionals you'll.

Recently, I posted a discussion about why I keep a small amount of cash at home under the figurative mattress for major emergencies. One of the controversies with that article which was discussed on Lifehacker , among other places was the idea of actually storing cash under your mattress. So, to alleviate those fears, I sent out a call to a large number of contacts asking where they would keep money at home besides under the mattress and compiled the sensible responses into a list of twenty places where you can store your money besides under the mattress. Why would you store it somewhere else? My recommendation is to choose one of these hiding places and place your cash there rather than actually under your mattress. Effective Places to Hide Money 1. In an envelope taped to the bottom of a kitchen shelf 2. In a watertight plastic bottle or jar in the tank on the back of your toilet 3. In a plastic baggie in the freezer 5. Inside of an old sock in the bottom of your sock drawer 6. In an empty aspirin bottle in the bathroom bundled up with a rubber band around it 7. In the pocket of a particular shirt in your closet 8. In an envelope taped to the back of a wall decoration In between several pages in a random book or two on your bookshelf Buried in a jar in the back yard my grandfather, incidentally, did this very thing In an envelope in the glove compartment of your car Underneath a potted plant or even buried in a small jar in the soil In an envelope taped to the bottom of a dresser drawer so you can reach it from the inside of the dresser below it Inside of a big coffee cup in the back of a cupboard Inside your Christmas decoration box Inside of an empty bottle of Guinness in the back of the fridge with the cap seemingly in place smash it to get the cash In a plastic baggie inside of a flour or coffee container In an envelope inside of a DVD case Get even more creative with these diversion safes.
