Chief exponent of the Arts and Crafts movement in Victorian England, renowned artist and craftsman William Morris () created a host of stunning patterns for wallpaper, fabrics, tapestries, floor coverings, and other decorative projects.

Arts and Crafts movement British Socialism William Morris 24 March - 3 October was an English architect , furniture and fabric designer , artist , writer , and socialist. He was born in Walthamstow in East London. Morris was educated at Marlborough and Exeter College, Oxford. In , he became an apprentice to Gothic revival architect G. That year he founded the Oxford and Cambridge Magazine. In , Morris founded a design firm in partnership with the artist Edward Burne-Jones, and the poet and artist Dante Gabriel Rossetti. This had a great impact on the decoration of churches and houses in the early 20th century. This was mainly based on a close observation of nature. He was also a major contributor to the resurgence of traditional textile arts and methods of production. Morris wrote and published poetry, fiction, and translations of ancient and medieval texts throughout his life, among others Story of Sigurd the Volsung and the Fall of the Niblungs This influence can be seen in the use of rhyme royal. William Morris designed his own furniture. He was frustrated, because he could not find any furniture he liked, so he decided, he wanted to design his own furniture, but it was mostly wallpaper designs. Morris was an important person in the emergence of socialism in Great Britain. He founded the Socialist League in However, he broke with the movement over goals and methods by the end of that decade. He devoted much of the rest of his life to the Kelmscott Press, which he founded in The Kelmscott edition of the Works of Geoffrey Chaucer is considered a masterpiece of book design. These children were followed by the birth of siblings Stanley in , Rendall in , Arthur in , Isabella in , Edgar in , and Alice in From this point, the family relied upon continued income from the copper mines at Devon Great Consols , and sold Woodford Hall to move into the smaller Water House. He despised his time there, being bullied, bored, and homesick. Guy, Assistant Master at the nearby Forest School. Although from very different backgrounds, they found that they had a shared attitude to life, both being keenly interested in Anglo-Catholicism and Arthurianism. They were known among themselves as the "Brotherhood" and to historians as the Birmingham Set. The Pre-Raphaelite style was heavily Medievalist and Romanticist, emphasising abundant detail, intense colours and complex compositions; it greatly impressed Morris and the Set. However, as time went on Morris became increasingly critical of Anglican doctrine and the idea faded. Mainly funded by Morris, who briefly served as editor and heavily contributed to it with his own stories, poems, reviews and articles, the magazine lasted for twelve issues, and garnered praise from Tennyson and Ruskin. The model is Jane Burden , who married Morris in His apprenticeship focused on architectural drawing, and there he was placed under the supervision of the young architect Philip Webb , who became a close friend. Burne-Jones shared this interest, but took it further by becoming an apprentice to one of the foremost Pre-Raphaelite painters, Dante Gabriel Rossetti ; the three soon became close friends. Morris designed and commissioned furniture for the flat in a Medieval style, much of which he painted with Arthurian scenes in a direct rejection of mainstream artistic tastes. It did not sell well and garnered few reviews, most of which were unsympathetic. Disconcerted, Morris would not publish again for a further eight years. Smitten with her, he entered into a relationship with her and they were engaged in spring ; Burden would later admit however that she never loved Morris. Operating from premises at No. They hoped to reinstate decoration as one of the fine arts and adopted an ethos of affordability and anti-elitism. His designs would be produced from by Jeffrey and Co. While there, he enjoyed walks in the countryside and focused on writing poetry. The book was a retelling of the ancient Greek myth of the hero Jason and his quest to find the Golden Fleece. Designed as a homage to Chaucer, it consisted of 24 stories, adopted from an array of different cultures, and each by a different narrator; set in the late 14th century, the synopsis revolved around a group of Norsemen who flee the Black Death by sailing away from Europe, on the way discovering an island where the inhabitants continue to venerate the ancient Greek gods. Published in four parts by F. Together they produced prose translations of the Eddas and Sagas for publication in English. Morris deemed calligraphy to be an art form, and taught himself both Roman and italic script, as well as learning how to produce gilded letters. Illustrated with Burne-Jones woodcuts, it was not a popular success. He settled on Kelmscott Manor in the village of Kelmscott , Oxfordshire , obtaining a joint tenancy on the building with Rossetti in June. Although generally disliking the country, Morris was interested in the Florentine Gothic architecture. Ellis taking his place. Snakeshead printed textile and "Peacock and Dragon" woven wool furnishing fabric Now in complete control of the Firm, Morris took an increased interest in the process of textile dyeing and entered into a co-operative agreement with Thomas Wardle , a silk dyer who operated the Hencroft Works in Leek, Staffordshire. As a result, Morris would spend time with Wardle at his home on various occasions between summer and spring Although many translations were already available, often produced by trained Classicists, Morris claimed that his unique perspective was as "a poet not a pedant". He declined, asserting that he felt unqualified, knowing little about scholarship on the theory of poetry. Refusing to allow her to be societally marginalised or institutionalised, as was common in the period, Morris insisted that she be cared for by the family. They then proceeded to visit a number of other cities, including Venice , Padua , and Verona , with Morris attaining a greater appreciation of the country than he had on his previous trip. Owned by the novelist George MacDonald , Morris would name it Kelmscott House and re-decorate it according to his own taste. He recognised that these programs of architectural restoration led to the destruction or major alteration of genuinely old features in order to replace them with "sham old" features, something which appalled him. He was particularly strong in denouncing the ongoing restoration of Tewkesbury Abbey.
