1: Jill Morris | LibraryThing

A very special book about a rare and endangered species found in one small area in Australia. Wombats are the most appealing furry mammals. The species called the Northern Hairy-nosed Wombat is teetering on the brink of extinction, having decreased to about 60 individuals living in burrows in the hot, dry north-west of Queensland.

Endorsed by the Wombat Foundation, this is the almost true story of some very special wombats which are more endangered than the panda. The central story is a colourful journey of a group of Northern Hairy-Nosed wombats living in Epping Forest National Park as they seek to find themselves a new home. This story will be much enjoyed by lower primary readers. At this conclusion of this seemingly simple narrative is three full pages of text outlining the true history of the Northern Hairy-Nosed wombats. Slightly older readers and their very interested teacher librarians – like myself! With younger students an abridged telling of the true history is sufficient for them to be aware of the plight of the hairy-noses, however, older students very much enjoyed the factual information about this wonderful wombat and we even conducted some further online research. Jackie French is a true wombat expert and her research for this book is, as with all her books, meticulous. Can I be her when I grow up please? You can read more of my ranting about her greatness here. Jackie says, The story of the Hairy-noses of Epping teaches us that endangered species can survive, if we care enough to give them a safe place to live. My life has been enormously richer because it has been shared with other species. May your lives be as rich in friendships with many other species, too. Jackie often manages to have a subtle or not so subtle! Employing watercolour and collage in her artwork, she has dressed each wombat individually which she discusses at the conclusion of the story and students will love pouring over the detail in the illustrations. I even had a mug which was more a piece of artwork, created for the launch. Clearly I am a wombat loving adult. More information can be found here.
