Circuit Court for the District of Columbia representing the interests of four high-impact nonprofit organizations that are on the front line assisting survivors affected by natural disasters and that advocate for improvements in assistance programs administered by the Federal Emergency Management Agency. This means the agency cannot fail to maintain adequate appeals procedures, nor can it fail to provide disaster survivors with the notice they need to navigate the complex system of federal regulations pertinent to post-disaster housing assistance. District Court for the District of Columbia on behalf of 26 disaster survivors whose homes were damaged after a series of devastating storms affecting millions of Texans in and The plaintiffs argue that FEMA has improperly employed secret eligibility standards unbeknownst to applicants. Plaintiffs have requested the courts to order FEMA to make its standards known to the public and to reconsider their claims. Plaintiffs then appealed to the U. Circuit Court for the District of Columbia. In recent years, individuals and families throughout the United States have increasingly been devastated by major storms, such as Hurricanes Dolly, Harvey, Ike and Sandy. These storms have particularly injured vulnerable individuals and families, including the elderly, disabled, veterans, families with young children, the underinsured, and those with low income. If the plaintiffs, with the assistance of the Penn State Law clinic, are successful before the D. Circuit, the case will have national impact. These criticisms were at an all-time high in the aftermath of Hurricane Katrina, yet, according to many, the agency has still not gone far enough since then to improve its processes. For example, clinic student Thomas Atkins worked closely with SBP, a New Orleans-based nonprofit with nationwide operations, which has allied with major partners to shrink the time between disaster and recovery and has served over 1, disaster-impacted clients, both homeowners and business operators. The participants in the clinic grasped the overall issue and commanded the details despite the very short amount of time they had to prepare the brief. They listened, understood our position, and presented it to our complete satisfaction through cogent and persuasive arguments. It includes ideas that we had not developed in years of looking at the problem. It emphasizes the broad effects of the challenged agency actions in ways that our clients cannot do alone. We are deeply grateful for their hard work. Literally millions of families may benefit from it. The importance of the issue and its real life implications is just one great thing about the clinic. Not many law students can say they contributed to a brief that is before a Circuit Court. Students conduct research, draft briefs, assist in case selection, develop substantive legal positions, and plan appellate strategy.

Everyone at Disaster-Smart who had a part in providing this certificate are to be commended for the manner in which they conducted their business. It was a pleasure working with each one involved. I do want to say something. It has been such a pleasure working with your company. From the initial call, through the inspection, and all of the follow up work you are doing, your company has been great. I will highly recommend you to anybody that I might hear of that needs any type of inspection that you do. Thank you from the bottom of my heart for all the help you guys have been. I have a phone call today with my insurance company about protection for the two doors listed on the report and I have a salesman I sincerely hope that Darius company is called upon with any or our future risks whenever possible. We are going to discuss the information you sent over yesterday and about the possibility of creating a form with inspection process with you guys to substantiate giving the IRC credit in AL and MS. I need to contact these guys to find out why they could only complete a portion of the form but it is really getting ridiculous out there. This was meant to help the home owner and encourage the Insurance companies to give credits where due. The spirit of the program is great but the increase in anyone and everyone signing these I will absolutely put your name on our preferred vendor list and use your firm to conduct the inspections in the listed fields of expertise. You have exceeded my expectations! Anyway we have the information from your report. I informed her that your reports are excellent and check with the agent to make sure all documents are scanned. His successful efforts to reach out to experts across different industries and create consensus is helping our efforts to make America a more disaster resistant nation.
