Building 4th grade study skills Last year your child dabbled in taking notes, but this year note taking becomes an important skill. Under the Common Core Standards, fourth graders are expected to use books, periodicals, websites, and other digital sources like a library database to conduct research projects — both on their own and as part of group work with peers. Your child should keep track of all the sources she checks — noting what she learns, the name of the source and page number or url so she can find it again and create a source list or bibliography later. Sorting evidence into categories will help her with the planning, writing, and revising stages of her project. Is all research and note taking confined to nonfiction sources? The more knowledge your child builds during the prewriting stage, the easier it will be to write. Encourage reading and rereading, taking notes, finding additional sources, discussing aloud how new knowledge fits in with what your child knew before, and visually organizing what he plans to write about. After the first draft is written, the teacher and possibly other students will offer feedback: Your child will then do a revision or two , adding, reordering, and refining his writing to show true, deep understanding. After making revisions, your child does a final edit — focusing on spelling, grammar, punctuation, and strengthening word choices. These steps — planning, writing a first draft, revising, and editing the final piece — help fourth graders understand that research, organizing, clarifying ideas, and improving grammar and presentation are all essential to strong writing. Students who exceed this time limit will be withdrawn by the instructor, unless there are extenuating circumstances. If the time limit violation occurs after the withdrawal date, the student may not pass the course. This policy applies to all sessions. Students who are withdrawn for violating the attendance policy should visit with an ACC counselor or advisor to discuss their options. Students who are TSI mandated are required by the state to participate in developmental education. However, students shall not be removed from college credit courses as long as they are still willing to participate in a developmental program at the level required by THECB regulations. Students will be given two opportunities to write a multi-paragraph persuasive essay in a one, three-hour block of time: Midterm and Final Exit Essay. Students who receive an IP grade are required to enroll in FOW during their next enrolled semester unless they take and pass the writing portion of the TSI. Instructors will provide students with a handout during the first week of class with the final Exit Essay testing date, time, and locations. Students are required to complete a weekly one hour lab assignment for fourteen of the sixteen weeks. The lab is currently scheduled in two ways. A TBA lab will allow students to meet the lab requirement as they find time in their schedules. Each instructor is responsible for providing students with a lab handout that outlines activities on a weekly basis, provides a rationale explaining the purpose of the activities, and explains how the activities will be graded. To receive an incomplete, a student must make a written request to the instructor and then fill out and sign the appropriate school document by the deadline noted in the current course schedule. Academic work submitted by students shall be the result of their thought, research, or self-expression. Academic work is defined as, but not limited to, essays; tests and quizzes, whether taken electronically or on paper; projects, either individual or group; classroom presentations; and homework. When a student borrows ideas, wording, or organization from another source, that information must be referenced using the methods prescribed by the instructor. Plagiarism or collusion could cause a student to receive a failing grade for the course or to be withdrawn from the course. Each instructor will provide students with a penalty policy for scholastic dishonesty. Collusion is unauthorized collaboration with another person or persons in preparing written work for fulfillment of course work. I expect you to do your own work. If you cheat or plagiarize on an assignment, I will assign you a 0 on that assignment. Repeated instances of academic dishonesty will result in failure of the course. Students with disabilities must request reasonable accommodations through the Office for Students with Disabilities on the campus where they expect to take the majority of their classes. Students are encouraged to do this three weeks before the start of the semester. In any classroom situation that includes discussion and critical thinking, there are bound to be many differing viewpoints. These differences enhance the learning experience and create an atmosphere where students and instructors alike will be encouraged to think and learn. On sensitive and volatile topics, students may sometimes disagree not only with each other but with the instructor. It is expected that faculty and students will respect all views expressed in classroom discussions. The grade you receive will not be the grade of your instructor, but rather the grade you and you alone make. You should attend class regularly and be prepared to participate in classroom discussions and to take unannounced quizzes relating to text assignments and lecture material presented from the beginning of the course. You are encouraged to give your best effort throughout the semester. Your course grade is not determined solely by exam grade. Such factors as class participation, initiative, attendance, and in-class writings will be considered in grade computation. If you are absent, it is your responsibility to arrange to make up assignments. You are expected to read all assigned material and bring your textbook to class. Keep informed on all assignments, especially after a period of absence. Good class notes are indispensable for earning a good grade since both the material assigned and discussed will be the basis for examination material. Pay special attention to any handouts. Cellular phones and beepers will be turned off while the student is in the classroom or laboratory. My office hours are a time for you to meet with me to discuss any concerns you have. If you cannot attend my office hours, I can make an appointment to discuss any concerns about your academic performance. If you are more than ten minutes late, the appointment will automatically be cancelled. Also, if you wish to discuss any concerns you may have about the course, do NOT interrupt me while I am teaching another class. The instructor reserves the right of final decision in course requirements. Individuals are expected to be cognizant of what a constructive educational experience is and respectful of those participating in a learning environment. Failure to do so can result in disciplinary action up to and including expulsion. The semester grade will be calculated according to this formula:

Writing Fundamentals When it comes to blogging, most typical writing rules are tossed out the window. We say skillz instead of skills, we incorporate slang or emojis into our posts, and we include far more exclamation points!!! But there are some writing fundamentals that never go out of style. But make sure you do these four things before you publish your post! Proofread No one is critically analyzing your blog posts. The reason you should proofread is because the power of your point is diffused when a reader is forced to trip through your words. Read and re-read and re-read your post again. Try reading your blog post out loud – this will make you slow down and really pay attention to the words. Make whatever changes you need to make to be sure it is, in fact, readable. Make Paragraphs Your Friend Blog posts are like pizza – better in slices. No one should shove an entire combination pizza into their mouth at once. Eat your pizza in bits and pieces and, sometimes, with a fork. The same can be said for your blog. Reading, especially longer posts, is more manageable when done in bits and pieces. Remember that people on the Internet move quickly through material. A block of text that would be fine in a book feels intimidating on a computer or phone screen. Embrace Good Grammar Your vs. Do any of these look familiar? Ensure your readers stay focused on what you have to say, rather than mentally correcting your grammar and sentence structure.
