What do you love about writing? Characters and seeing how God works in the story. I love writing about relationships and the different dynamics between people, particularly between siblings and in family conflict. Who is your favorite book couple ever? Their relationship was really fun to follow and they are quite adorable together. This is also Ela and Kien. They had a very interesting and amusing first meeting. It definitely had me giggling and made for fun character and relationship growth through the series. What couple did you ship, only to be disappointed? It never seems to end well. What book really illustrates the love of God for us in a way that caught your attention? Can I mention Books of the Infinite again? It has really grown to be my favorite book series of all time, especially for this reason. I was very impressed by how the author wrote God into the story. Sometimes we tend to forget just how present and active God is in our own lives and how much He truly loves and cares for us. What is your favorite form of love to write into your own books? I love writing all forms of relationships in my books. Friendship always plays a huge part. But I also love writing about families and their love for each other. It starts out very slow. They first are best friends before any romance enters the picture. I loved building their relationship so slowly and solidly from the ground up. This happens to me all the time. I had three couples in my Makilien Trilogy that were not planned, and another three in Ilyon Chronicles. Do you find it harder or easier to write romantic love or friendship love in your books? At times, romance can be harder. It largely depends on the characters. Do you have a favorite friend pair in your books? There are so, so many. I could name off several from Ilyon Chronicles alone. Of everyone in the trilogy, Makilien probably relied on him the most. Molly Evangeline is a homeschool graduate and indie Christian author in her mid-twenties.
